POETRY.

From the New-York Mirror. THE BOWERY THEATRE.

Miss Medina's benefit at this theatre was, as it ought to have been, fully and fashionably attended, and was equally complimentary and profitable to her. We subjoin the address spoken on the occasion by Mr and Mrs Flynn.

Flynn .- I like this notion, mightily, indeed !

Would you deny the debt to genius due? 'Tis well our manager's more wise than you.

He, 'mid the triumples of his scenic throne, Forgets not others, in himself alone!

Flynn.---Ah, that, indeed; but—

Mrs Flynn.---Hold! just now you chid: "But me no buts," you said. Flynn.---Lord! so I did!

Stand back, I say, sir!

Flynn.---Mercy, here's a row!---Exit. [he says!

Mrs Flynn.---Half reasoning dunce! he knows not what

He grumbles not, when for his meat he pays.

A coat, a yard of broadcloth, or a fan; The bills for these, he settles, if he can! Nor ever deems himself an injured man. But, the poor author, who devotes her hours To strew life's wintry path with fragrant flowers, Whose wand, the saddest breast of care beguiles, Who charms with softening tears or grateful smiles, Oh, shall her unseen labors be forgot? Shall no bright sunshine cheer her gloomy lot?
Ye, sons of Commerce, plough the stormy main,
And fill your ample halls with hoarded gain. Ye, learned lawyers, too, expound the laws; But, first --- a fee --- to undertake our cause ! Ye, doctors wise, who always cure---(or kill!) Must also live, and we---must pay the bill. All you, of course, receive your ample due; And, on my life, so should the author, to There was a time, (for so, alas, we read!) When authors led a sorry life, indeed! A female writer was, (heaven help her trade!) A wild, half-robed, forgetful, furious maid; Spouting her verses in the open street, With her torn stockings loose about her feet! A proverb then, a poet was, for wo! Watchful for any bone the rich might throw. A very dog! that dined but once a week! A fellow in a garret, and a sneak! But, now, the scene is changed, and better times Await the man of learning and of rhymes. Not only they who read, but they who write, Eat food by day, and sleep in rooms by night ! No longer lurk reluctant in the shade ! Are known, admired, loved, honored, praised and -- paid And she, our skilful dramatist to-night, Whose genius oft hath brought before your sight, Of young romance so many a stirring theme, Lent real substance to the poet's dream; Bid his bright scenes, in actual colors rise, Transferred his air-drawn fancies from the skies; Breathed all the magic of his silent page, And rear'd his gorgeous visions, on the stage Merits not she more than our grateful strain Were all her arduous toils conceived in vain? No! by the skies, that o'er Columbia bend! Here, shall young Merit never want a friend. Reward her efforts, and sustain her cause, With more substantial harvest than applause. Aid her, ye critics, and assist, ye fair;

CELESTE AND THE FRENCH WAR.

Nor doom an author to exist on air.

Flynn, of the Bowery, tells a good story about his terrifying the fascinating Celeste, during her late engagement at that theatre, with the news that the Delaware, seventy-four, was coming up the bay with four French seventy-fours, which she had captured, in fortyfive minutes, off the West India Islands. The celestial creature was sitting on a sofa in the green room, waiting to spring like an antelope upon the stage, when Flynn came in, serious as a surplice, and delicately communicated to her the astounding intelligence. She jumped up, and protested that it could not be true; one or even two ships, of inferior size, she admitted that the Delaware might have taken; but four seventyfours, captured by one, she indignantly vowed was "imposseeble!" Flynn, however, was positive; he had just seen two or three dozen of the officers who had been landed at the quarantine ground on parole, and had arrived at the battery in the steamboat Bolivar; and several of the Albany evening boats had gone down for eight or nine hundred of the inferior prisoners, to take them or nine hundred of the inferior prisoners, to take them or nine hundred of the inferior prisoners, to take them or nine hundred of the owner. landed at the quarantine ground on parole, and had arup to that city, and to West Point. Celeste still professed to be incredu'ous; yet every moment exclaimed,
"Oh! my poor countrymen! Oh! how will my brave country bear dis dishonor—dis misfortune of de war!"
And, just at this moment, an incident occurred which savered the last fond tendrile of her proud national here. sed to be incredulous; yet every moment exclaimed, severed the last fond tendrils of her proud national hope, and threw her into a flood of tears. The City Hall bell rung out a rapid alarm of fire, which was immediately followed by the consentaneous clamor of half the steepwith unfeigned emotion. "Oh!" said Flynn, with cruel gravity, "we are ringing for the victory, you know—which is quiet natural for us—do compose yourself, my dear madam—and hear three hours are the control of the con yourself, my dear madam-and hear! you have now to go on—do, I beg of you, compose yourself." But the music was protracted sometime, and there was no little stamping in the pit, before poor Celeste could enlittle stamping in the pit, before poor Celeste could enter upon lively duties, so uncongenial with the distressed state of her feelings. On her return to the green-room, Flynn wickedly proceeded to console her with the assurance that all the officers of the captured squadron would undoubtedly attend the theatre to witness her exquisite performances, in a day or two. But she declared that she would never dance before her imprisoned countrymen, and that although she was very grateful for the liberal patronage of the American people, whom she loved next to them, yet would she give"tree-seven times" as much money as she had ever received in this country, if she could but repair the wounded honor of her own. In short, she took the matter so much to heart, that Flynn was compelled to go out and return with the agreeable explanation, that it was a French squadron reported off Guadaloupe that gave rise to the rumor ; and the French officers, seen at the Battery, were merely some British officers on a tour of amusement from Caaada! There is a green-room whispe: that Celeste made Flynn's ears ring as smartly as any steeple in the city, but he is very chary of this finale of the anecdote. - N. Y.

For the Roston Morning Post. Mr Editor-In your paper of Monday, I observe some reflections cast upon me, and also some unjust aspersions of Dr Howe, by Mr Williams, the Royal Oculist, who, although he does not cure the blind poor precisely as our Saviour did, by the use of yellow clay—still has no objection that the poor shall furnish him with that article in an improved form for the healing of his own avarice. The principal argument advanced by Mr Williams, Royal Occulist, is, that I keep a soup cellar, and sell herrings and sausages. This is a species of logic with which we, on this side of the Atlantic, are unacquainted. Perhaps the knowledge of the human system possessed by the Royal Oculist has en-Flynn.—I like this notion, mightily, indeed!
To-night, forsooth, more benefits decreed!
More benefits! Pshaw! marry come up, Madam!
Already, half the town, I think, have had 'em!
Mrs Flynn.—But Mr Flynn—
Flynn.—But me no "buts," I say.
Pll stop them all. 'Twas but the other day—
Mrs Flynn.—Nay, now, be calm. I'm sure I can explain.
Flynn.—You can't, I tell you. I'll not act again.
P'm out of patience, and shall lose my wits,
With these eternal, useless benefits! [sir? for shame!
With these cernal, useless benefits! [sir? for shame!
Your heart is cold to modest Merit's claim.
Would you deny the debt to genius due?

of logic with which we, on this side of the Atlantic, are unacquainted. Perhaps the knowledge of the human system possessed by the Royal Occulist has enabled him to discover that herrings and sausages have a tendency to pervert the moral faculties. If such be the case, I may still have hope; for my business is not of the kind which the veracious Mr Williams, Royal Occulist, represents it to be. Even if such was my avocation, I should not deem myself unworthy of credit on that account; but could most heartily wish that the Royal Quack was engaged in half so honorable an employment. If it is not presumption in a plain republican, to criticise the language of a Royal Occulist. ment. If it is not presumption in a plain republican, to criticise the language of a Royal Occulist, I would also suggest that the frequent and abrupt charge of lying made by the gentleman is hardly a voucher for his own gentlemanly breeding and manners. It must, however, be extremely revolting to one who has shone in courts and annointed the eyes of princes, to be obliged to deal with the orbs of poor republicans. Perhaps this is the reason that he compels them to take off their hats Mrs Flynn .-- What! again? Back, sir; you chafe when they come into his august presence, and treats them with such rough and insolent language, that a London footman dressed in his master's cast-off clothes could hardly equal him in importance and pompous vulgarity. But, for this he may be excused, as an abund. ance of brass is necessary for a quack. He says he will prove it to be impossible that a blind man could see him "pour remedies from a bottle and afterwards take it up by means of a spoon."

This a pretty fair sample of Mr W's. honesty. By reference to the article alluded to, and from which Mr Howe has quoted, it will be perceived that I stated that Mr W. was guilty of the above foul and disgusting practice—but did not say that a blind man saw it. I can bring proof of the fact without having recourse to any such dark evidence. I am prepared to exhibit the plain truth, and will call upon no person to sign a certificate by which he shall bind himself to hide the truth. I leave such honorable and high souled practices to Mr Williams, Royal Oculist, Instructor of the American Republic in Morals, Religion, Politics, Courtly etiquette and Metaphysics, Miraculous physician, brother to the sun, moon and stars, etc. etc. etc.

The veracious Oculist also affirms that Dr. Howe caused me to affix my signature to his own "precious document." Such, I believe, is not the practice of Dr. Howe; although I might mention one individual now in this community, who is daily in the habit of compelling individuals to sign his certificates; and many of those thus compelled are so blind as not to be able to read the documents to which they are ordered to affix their names. Dr. Howe never saw my article until several days after I had written it; neither was any alteration suggested by that gentleman.

STENOGRAPHIC GLIMPSES OF CONGRESS.

Washington, March 11, 1836. Senate. - The bill for appropriations to extend the Cumberland Road through Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, being ander consideration, Mr Clay spoke at some length. He argued that Congress had a constitutional right to make internal improvements, as it could not have been derived from the compact with those States through which the road was to pass; that the 2 1-2 per cent, on the sale of public lands (at $1.25 per acre) in the three above mentioned States would not amount to more than $700,000, which it had been pretended was the fund for making the youd; whereas five or six millions had already been expended; that as he had entered into some " bargain, intrigue and management," with his honorable friends who now asked for the appropriation, he would be liberal with them, and allow Indiana $250,000. He said be did not know where the honorable Senator (Mr Tipton) got his enormous calculation of 7 millions from the 2 1-2 per cent. fund from the Land's sale, unless from the moon, or the gentleman who had recently made such wonderful discov-

Mr Tipton informed him that he got it from nothing but from the honorable Senator from Kentucky himself!-from one of his speeches, (as I understood) delivered some time since on the Cumberland Road bill, when that Senator went into a 2 1-2 per cent. calculation to show what an enormous sum might be derived from a small per centage on the sales of the public lands. The laugh was transferred from Mr Tipton to Mr Clay, who blushed like a lobster at the unexpected information.

Col. Benton spoke, urging the whole amount reported, to be appropriated, and called for yeas and nays. Mr Porter spoke, going against all appropriations, unless all the States could share in them. Mr Clay gave a history of the Cumberland Road. Mr Hendricks said Indiana was not chargeable with the last appropriation on the road, for repairing it. Ewing spoke, and explained the 2 1-2 per cent. fund by stating that the amount from the sale of lands in the States of Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, was to be applied to constructing the road leading to those States; and that the fund, agreeable to the compacts with those States, had not been expended. He solved the enigma very clearly, after all the mystery and sophistry Mr Clay had thrown round it. I begin to like Ewing, in proportion as he finds it his interest to act in opposition to Mr Clay-for in this same proportion, it appears to me, he approaches the principles of honesty and good sense. The bill, with various amendments, passed by a large vote.

Mr T. Ewing then gave notice, he should call up on Monday the bill for the distribution of the sale of public lands for a limited period.

Abolition next coming in order, Mr Leigh said he should withdraw his amendment, Mr King of Alabama had been so very polite. So much for politeness. I do think 'tis a christian virtue-certainly, it sometimes beats logic all hollow.

Mr McKean moved an amendment to Mr Buchanan's " rejection," viz: " that it was inexpedient to legislate at this time," &c., giving as a reason that he had not been influenced by any thing that had been said! He and Mr Hendricks were the only ones voting for it-37 against it; Mr McKean said it would go on the journal, and this would satisfy him. Mr Ewing said a word or two. Mr Hendricks made a remark. Mr Calhoun spoke at some length, state of slavery in this District, they would not vote to reject the prayer of the petitioners. Mr Preston held himself bound to take part in all the votes of the Senate. Mr Walker said he had been misled in his former vote, (by him, they will, probably, call a County Convention, and timony, his honor concluded by saying—If I were to legislating, but he was now satisfied it only recognized the sacred right of petition. Col. Benton had a memorandum on his book to abolish the slave trade in the District of Columbia, but had forborne to take up the subject while it was agitated at the North. Mr Davis spoke at some length, showing that this agitation was all groundless; that this was the first time it had been questioned whether Congress had a right to abolish slavery in the District .be committed and reported upon. He made the most sensible speech I have heard on the subject. I will put John Davis any day against all the agitators of the South on any subject of agitation. But do not mistake me-This subject is calculated to have a bearing on the next Presidential Election; and though now but an unlicked cub, it will be licked into a formidable shape—yet be muzzled as soon as the Election is over.

The vote on Mr Buchanan's motion to reject stood 34 to 6-Messrs, Davis, Hendricks, Knight, Morris, Prentiss and Webster, (if I understood right) voting in the nega-

There was an error in our report of the proceedings of the U. S. Senate on the 11th instant-it was the prayer of the abolition petition, and not the petition itself, which was rejected-the vote of the Senate was, in effect, to give the petitioners leave to withdraw.

Col. Prescott made a long and most powerful argument for the defence, in which he attacked with extreme severity the testimony and motives of Mrs Ran-

The facts supposed to bear in support of the prose-Esqr. but in one instance, perhaps, his treatment of one of the defendant's witnesses was unnecessary harsh.

The arguments on both sides being concluded, about 4 o'clock, His Honor Mr Justice Rogers, commenced a mass of evidence in the case, and in a clear and ample manner, stated and explained his opinions of its various bearings. Before entering into the details of the case, he deprecated that misplaced humanity, which regards only those who are accused, or convicted of crime, instead of the safety of the community—that hu-manity which would secure the life of an offender, rather than secure the lives of many by restraining the offender. The circumstance that the defendant was an unfortunate woman, was no ground for misplaced sympathy, and still less for misplaced severity; and the discharge of his duty afforded no room for either.

After observing that the death of Mr Ames, though ination of the Hon MARCUS MORTON for the office of arrested public attention, at the time, and that though a friendless man, without note, or consequence, had Governor, at the ensuing election, made by the Democratic Legislative Convention, and of the Hon WILLIAM FOScommunity was bent on the object, it was not to be wondered at that the prosecution was instituted; and he was called upon to say, upon all the evidence, given under the solemnity of oaths, whether there were any such legal and probable grounds for the suspicions Resolved, That the thanks of this meeting are due to existing in relation to it, as would make it his duty to see Democratic members of the Legislature for their fear-send the case to be inquired into by the Grand Inquest

His honor then stated the questions, which naturally arose in the case :- The first being-Is the person al leged to be poisoned, dead? The 2d-Was his death unlawful? The 3d-Was the defendant's connection with him such, as to render it probable that she had

That Mr Ames was dead was admitted, and the trusult to be, that Mr Ames' death might have been produced by four causes besides, poison, one of the four being the Thomsonian medicine, as a stomach had been known to be more contracted by lobelia. It was pretty manifest, that the defendant had not administered to the deceased essential oils, as poison, because if Resolved, That the friends of Democratic principles in their exhibition would have been indicated by their so administered in sufficient quantities to produce death, odour, on the post mortem examination.

With respect to arsenic, or the metalic poisons, not a prejudices, all "minor considerations") in the glorious particle was detected either in the body, or by chemical process, and the grand and leading symptom of the process, and the grand and leading symptom of the stomach-the corrugation-was not one ever known to follow from arsenic, but had been seen in the stom-

The leading sympton, therefore, did not indicate poison. There was likewise an absence of all proof of vomitting and emissions, by which arsenic might have been ejected. The fact that there was not such evacuation, was proved by four witnesses for the government, and by two for the defendant. In this connexion, Justice Rogers laid great stress on the fully established fact, that the defendant earnestly solicited the physicians to make an examination. He thought it impossible that any person who had cause to apprehend discovery from such an examination, would ed upon having one made. Instead, therefore, said his honor, of believing that the deceased came to his death

His honor then adverted, at great length, to the deone, and the Resolutions adopted with still greater unan- fendant's violent threats against her husband, and though he severely censured them, yet he showed how they were always made under the smart of provocathe two first offices in the State, and of those for Electors, evidence of a bad, high temper, and not of settled masaying the Senate doors were thrown open to the abolition- were carried by nearly an unanimous vote. In conclusion, after a most masterly and elaborate exposition of the relative force of every part of the tesprosecution, without taking into consideration the eviderce in the defence, it would be, that instead of the government having shown a probable case of death by poison, the government have made out a cause that it is improbable that the cause of the death was by Fires -Between midnight and 1 o'clock this (Tuesday) morning, one of the outbuildings connected with the residence and establishment of Mr Lauriat, goldbeater and assayist, on Washington street, was destroyed by fire, and a horse perished in the flames. Loss $500; no insurance.

At 3 o'clock, a fire occurred in building No 79 Cornhill, owned by Eben Francis. It was occupied on the first floor by Hovey & Co., as a seed store; on the second, by the Horticultural Society; on the third by Benjamin Adams, bookbinder, (whose loss is about $400-no insurance,) and on the fourth by Madison Hall, printer, who was insured $800, but his loss is much greater.

About 4 o'clock, some firemen returning home, discovered fire between two wooden buildings in Boylston street, and extinguished it with a few buckets of water.

At 7 o'clock, another party of firemen discovered smoke issuing from a wood shed attached to a private house opposite the Athenæum in Pearl street, and on entering the premises they found a place on fire nearly a yard square.

The Horticultural Society lost twenty elegant paintings of fruit from nature, which ornamented the walls of their rcom; and their valuable library was a good deal injured, they had $1200 insurance. Mr Francis was not insured. Messrs Hovey & Co. were insured $1200.

All these fires were undoubtedly the work of incendiaries.

No. 443, occupied by Mrs Gardner, as a millinery store, was partially burnt, and a small portion of her stock consumed. We learn there was no insurance. To the Editor of the Boston Morning Post. Sir—I suppose your readers will by this time, have had quite enough of the sarcastic, and of the causes, which produced their effects. Both are now before the public, who may judge, who is right and who is wrong—In War, as well as in Famine, every means to procure ammunition, or sustenance is considered justifiable—though sometimes perhaps obtained improserly.

I do not blame the Gentlemen of the Faculty, for what they have done, as it has and will, do me much good! but I blame them and their agents, for having had recourse to falsehood; because that is an ingredient which will not bear the Test of examination—'dike false gold'—the Goldsmith will inform you in one minute by his Test whether or not it is Gold! Ask them to know which will best bear the test, hold all of the fabrications of my enemies to the light and also my answers, and you will easily be able to judge. I can call Heaven to witness that it grieved me to be forced to write any thing likely te wound the feelings of the friend of the most excellent Mr Joseph Howard, of Providence! and I shall never cease te blame myself for my stupidity in supposing this striend to be a Doctor of Divinity, or of the Belle Lettres instead of Doctor of Physic, as in that case I should not for a moment have consented to accept any letter to him, a copy of which Mr Howard wrote and presented to me as an inducement for me to make up my mind as soon as possible to come to Bosten—calling him his dearest friend—and that "he was sure for his sake, he would receive me with every consideration"—Mr Howard thought so. So did a "Certain man." Read Acts 20, Ch. 9 to 18 verses!! I shall add no more at present; but refer your readers to very important communications in your next Post.

I have the honor to be, Sir, Yours, &c.

JOHN WILLIAMS, Oculist.
